One of the many scenes around Provincetown which provides the unique atmosphere so endearing to visitors, is shown here: Capt. Jack's Wharf on Commercial Street's West End. Not many of the guests who stay in the assortment of studios and apartments that ramble out along the wharf, know that there actually was a Captain Jack. Capt. Jack Williams, who died about 22 years ago, bought, sold and cured fish on the wharf for many years, and afterwards ran the place as a "home away from home" for tourists and artists. Purchased shortly after Capt. Jack's death by Dr. Daniel H. Hiebert, the wharf is now managed during the summer season by Miss Ruth Hiebert, the doctor's daughter, and is one of the most popular places to stay in Provincetown.
