

ADAMS PHARMACY about 1910 was only as deep as its one story front. In sandy Gosnold street at left (top photo) stood J. D. Adams' sign, a pole bearing a mortar and pestle. Five-year-old Norman Cook, his grandson, is playing "horsie," holding reins tied to the pole. Below, Norman holds the screen door for a 1969 customer. Out of sight inside, the 1910 door still functions.
