Frederick Halsall Found Art Mecca

PROVINCETOWN, May 16—Discoverer of this Cape-tip town as the mecca of artists was Frederick Halsall, who painted great canvasses of the harbor at sunset, the old-time sail craft and the dunes against the ocean background. His findings brought other artists to Provincetown until, today, this art colony is permanently established as one of the most important places for art in the country.

Paintings done in Provincetown have won coveted honors in leading art competitions in America, and names of famous artists are as well-known and familiar in this village as in the large cities of the world.
