

. . . . U. S. rum chaser Morrill, blown ashore in the storm of December, 1926, sank four fishing schooners and smashed two wharves—Small's and Knowles' in the east end. The Morrill, pictured high and dry following its gale-driven cruise, dumped a night club into the sea, upset a fish market and tore from their moorings a quartet of smaller boats. Its entire crew of 25 were aboard all during its escapades, and not one was harmed. Courtesy Mrs. Ida S. Coope
